Hi Friends,

I was reading a very interesting article on business partnership which I am sharing .

For business partners, few more important words exist, than “How are you doing, partner?”

Why? Because your success lies in staying aligned and not falling into the non-communicative trap that creates so much partnership difficulty. Communication is one of the essential leadership skills and it’s also one of the biggest obstacles for business partners.

As partners, you should meet regularly with a clear agenda and defined objectives. If you have a board of directors, you can include them. Either way, coming together with the purpose of discussing vision, strategy and plans from the ownership perspective creates trust and unity. It’s a time to have deep discussions and sometimes confrontation in a safe environment, without the rest of the team present. You emerge with a clear set of shared goals, values and direction for the company. This ownership meeting is a place to practice authentic regard for your partner and acknowledge each other’s contribution. Partners need validation and appreciation, just like employees, and the best way to receive it is to give it to each other.

Structure, Structure, Structure

Next to lack of communication, lack of structure is the second biggest obstacle facing business partners.

Co-CEO is a No-No

Here’s a cold hard truth about partnerships: you can’t both be CEO.

Well, OK, it’s possible – there’s always an exception to the rule – but its not recommended. It seldom works and you can avoid a lot of difficulty by accepting it. Someone has to take on the chief leadership role and the other partner or partners need to report to them to replicate the proper structure.

The article is a long one .Hence I have abridged the same. In case you want the full version , just mail me and I shall send the same .

Hope you enjoyed it

Happy reading,

Manish Kr. Bhaia

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

P RESIDENTIAL L ADDRESS

Dear Friends !

This is my second communication to you since I took over this office.

In between, we had had our First E.C.Meeting wherein we appointed Chairmen of various sub-committees and the list of Invitees.

I had the opportunity of attending the Managing Committee Meeting of PlastIndia Foundation at Mumbai as IPF representative.

I was welcomed by the committee members and it was a very fruitful meeting where the activities and plans of action were discussed.

Due to ban on wide range of plastics in Karnataka, Chandigarh, Punjab, Himachal, Rajasthan and other regions and states, the responsibility is cast upon us as association/plastic body to jointly defend our case and remove the wrong notion and misgivings about use of plastics. The writ petition filed with the Karnataka High Court has been referred to National Green Tribunal for final hearing on 19th April. The High Court has given interim relief to Karnataka Plastics Association by stating that plastic manufacturers will not be unduly harassed while enforcing law by the State Government.

The various associations have joined hands for this and DCPC has also assured to give all support and relief along with Ministry of Environment and Forest.

Plastic Industry is criticised for its inaction and it is said that it does very little to improve its image unlike paper, glass and metal industries. It needs to gear up itself to create awareness amongst common public that plastics have become indispensable for our life and we cannot live without plastics.

It's heartening to note that, of late, associations are coming together to raise a common platform to raise their collective voice against blanket ban on plastics.

The central government has formulated Plastics Waste Management Rules,2016 to address the problems of plastics. Your association is ready to play its active role in this field.

With the start of new financial year, plastic processors and traders are entering into MOUs with domestic producers. It is observed that the domestic producers are more interested in maximising their sales to their own region. Thus, they are gradually becoming regional players and this is not in the long term interest of the industry.

In such a situation, processors and traders will have to heavily depend on their regional suppliers and if the domestic regional player encounters any problem, all of them are going to suffer.

In this situation, Reliance Industries Ltd, as a market bellweather has a larger role to play and due to their capacity and capability, they can fill the supply gap.

Otherwise, large customers will have to depend on imports to maintain smooth flow of materials.

The meeting of OPEC countries concluded without any consensus decision on production freeze due to Iran's unwillingness to make any production curbs and Saudi Arabia remaining firm on its stand. The crude prices softened and posed a fresh threat that they may once again fall below $40 a barrel.

The polymer prices may witness some correction in prices in coming months if crude maintains its downward journey. But, there should not be much downside in prices.

I conclude my communication by quoting the beautiful lines of Robert Frost:-

From the Desk of Hony. Secretary

Dear Members,

Greetings on occasion of Baishakhi, Subho Nabo Barsho, Ramnavami, Bheu and Mahavir Jayanti.

The first meeting of the newly elected Executive Committee was held on 15th March 2016. As per our ritual the Executive Committee requested Shri Ramesh Kr Rateria, President IPF, to be our representative in the Managing Committee of Plastindia Foundation in place of the retiring President which he accepted. The Executive Committee also nominated Shri Ramesh Kr Rateria to be IPF representative in the Constitution Committee of Plastindia Foundation. The Executive Committee selected members as Special Invitee to EC and formed sub-committees. It was decided that the sub-committees will commence work immediately for the benefit of members.

Arising out of the success of Indplas' 15 exhibition, the Federation has decided to earmark substantial surplus from the exhibition for development of our IPF Knowledge Centre coming up at Sankrail in district Howrah. The surplus from Indplas' 15 will provide the much needed finance for continuation of the work.

The undersigned attended a seminar on 'Toxic Link' at Hotel Park and made a presentation on plastics and spoke on the advantages of plastics i.e non-polluting, recyclable and low consumption of energy compared to other materials.

Shri Rajesh Mohta, our Past President has been selected as a member in the Core Team formed for "Constitution of Core Team for Chemical & Petrochemical Sector regarding the implementation of National Skill Qualification Framework" under the chairmanship of DG CIPET for formulating and standardization of syllabus and course materials of various skill development organisations. He had also attended a meeting of Skill Development in Gurgaon and has requested suggestions from members for incorporation in the skill development curriculum.

The Federation has very successfully made its representation before the I.T. authorities and has got the necessary relief as desired by us. Shri Ramawatar Poddar was entrusted with this responsibility and he has very successfully handled the I.T. case. The Executive Committee at its meeting held on 4th April 2016 recorded the excellent services rendered by Shri Ramawatar Poddar and house gave a standing ovation and applause in absentia.

The RBI has cut the repo rate by another 25 basis points, bringing the cumulative reduction in the policy rate to 150 basis points. The Central Bank also decided to step up liquidity which should help banks cut lending rates. After the central government's decision to stick to fiscal discipline and bring small savings rates down, it is now the turn of the banks to lower their lending rates, armed as they are with more room to lower deposit rates and a new way to set their lending rates, based on the marginal cost of funds. The reduction of lending rates will help growth of industry since borrowing capital will be cheaper.

Lifting of sanctions on Iran has opened up new investment opportunities for India, especially in the area of energy and seen as a big positive that will boost bilateral ties between the two nations. Shri Dharmendra Pradhan, Hon'ble MoS of Petroleum and Natural Gas visited Iran from April 9-10, 2016 and discussed expanding the basket of oil and gas trade. He also signed agreements for expanding investments on both sides that will boost this sector. Since plastic granules is a petroleum product, Shri Pradhan's initiative of visiting Iran will have a positive impact on the growth of polymer industry in both Iran and India.

With best wishes

Decoding Conduct

Dr. Devdutt Pattanaik

God gave Moses a set of commandments to give to his chosen people. These were set in stone, meaning they were non-negotiable. Yet, the Bible is full of stories of non-compliance. For example, there is the commandment: ‘Thou shalt not commit adultery’ yet King David has an affair with his commander’s wife, angering God. There is the commandment: ‘Thou shalt not kill’ yet Judaic, Christian and Islamic history is full of violence.

Besides God’s commandments, every religion based on Abrahamic mythology has elaborate sets of codes of conduct. There is the Talmud, which compiles laws of the landless, migrating Jewish people, along with arguments about their interpretation by experts at different times and in different geographies. There is the dogma of the Catholic Church, which continues to see homosexuality as incorrect and feels women are not worthy of becoming the Pope. Then there is the Hadith of the Muslims, collections of quotes of Prophet Muhammad on various topics, which is often seen as non-violable law.

The Hindus also have such a code, known as Manu-Smriti — at least that is what the British and Indian judicial system believes, though historians are not so sure if this dharma shastra was ever seen as a ‘code.’

Corporations have adopted this religious practice. Every company has a code of conduct plastered on its walls, websites and files. This is now seen as a ‘legal’ requirement. The assumption being: if an employee steals, you cannot accuse him of theft unless your code of conduct explicitly states that they are not supposed to steal. This may sound corny, but it seems to be the trend. And so, corporations actually have to tell their people that they value ‘integrity’ and declare that they are ‘value-based’ organisations. So, what is a value-based organisation? One that does not get caught? Or one that expressly states that it cherishes ‘values’?

Or one where people behave as the management wants them to — obediently always, yet innovatively when necessary? At the heart of this need to expressly state codes of conduct is our desire to control the behaviour of people or to clarify what behaviour is valued and what is not. In the Vedic scheme of things, however, rules were never valued. Or rather, rules were not seen as the major tool for cultural control. What mattered was context. A person’s behaviour is an outcome of the ecosystem in which he lives and his own personality. Hence, the constant refrain, even in the Manu-Smriti, that behaviour is an outcome of place (desha), time (kala) and guna (personality). Hence the concept of yugas: with Ram, the eldest son of a royal family expected to behave very differently from Krishna, the youngest son of a not-so-royal family. Rules, at best, serve as hygiene.

You cannot control one whose gunas (natural propensity) propel him to be dishonest, but you can create an ecosystem that encourages honesty. Here, the ownership falls not on judges and lawyers, but on leaders, on how they behave and how they treat their followers. While you can compel people to be obedient, you cannot compel people to trust.

For that, you have to make yourself trustworthy. An act of breach of trust is hurtful as it strikes at our notion of self. It is more an emotional injury than a legal one. What matters more than rules is intent. But intent is not measurable and hence of no use in the corporate world. So codes of conduct and value-training workshops are just one of the many levers that create culture.

To depend on them is an indicator that the management believes in domesticating people, like farm animals. After all, the Lord is my shepherd, or cowherd!
